

WILD DUBLIN

Exploring Nature in the City

We All Live Here ...

When you look at the maps on pages 12–13 and the aerial pictures on pages 14–15, you can get two different views of the same region.

You can find maps and aerial pictures of your own regions at:

maps.google.co.uk

maps.live.com

www.Multimap.com

(Each site offers different views; try selecting terrain, satellite, road or bird's eye view)

- Look at the maps and pictures of your own regions and then try to shade in the areas where you think that creatures could live. Try to give a reason for your choices.
- Read the description on page 15 of how Éanna has defined the area that she intends to investigate for her book. Could you use the space below to write a similar definition for the area that you are going to investigate in your own local region?
- Éanna has chosen the title Wild Dublin for her book. What do you think that this means? Is there more than one way that you could look at the meaning? Try to find an interesting title for the study of your own area. The title could include the name of your area or some of the animals that you might find here for instance, or it might say something about how you feel about your region.

You can use the box below to write your description of where you will investigate and what your investigation will be called.
